I. Write an essay on one of the following in about 1000 words. 100

- (a) Indian Cultural Resources
- (b) Digital India
- (c) Ethical values in Public Service
- (d) Religion as a cohesive force
- (e) Democratic values and Bureaucracy

II. Read the passage below and answer the questions with brief yet analytic bent of mind :

A remarkable ingredient of human nature is here : Good Temper. "Love is not easily provoked". Nothing could be more striking than to find this here. We are inclined to look upon bad temper as a very harmless weakness. We speak of it as a mere infirmity of nature, a family failing, a matter of temperament, not a thing to take into very serious account in estimating a man's character. And yet here, right in the heart of this analysis of iove, it finds a place ; and again and again returns to condemn it as one of the most destructive elements in human nature. The peculiarity of ill temper is that it is vice of the virtuous. It is often the one blot on an otherwise noble character. You know men who are all but perfect, and women who would be entirely perfect, but for an easily ruffled quick-tempered or "touchy" disposition. This compatibility of ill temper with high moral character is one of the strangest and saddest problems of ethics. The truth is there are two great classes of sins - sins of the Body, and sins of Disposition. The Prodigal son may be taken as a type of the first, the elder brother of the second. Now society has no doubt whatever as to which of these is the worse. Its brand falls, without a challenge, upon the Prodigal. But are we right ? We have no balance to weigh on another's sins, and coarser and finer are but human words ; but faults in the higher nature may be less venial than those in the lower, and to the eye of Him who is Love, a sin against Love may seem a hundred times more base. No form of vice, not worldliness, not greed of gold, not drunkenness itself does more to un-Christianise society than evil temper. For embittering life, for breaking up communities, for destroying the most sacred relationships, for devastating home, for withering up men and women, for taking the bloom off childhood ; in short for sheer gratuitous misery-producing power, this influence stands alone. Jealousy, anger, pride, cruelty, self-righteousness, touchiness, doggedness, sullenness are ingredients of ill temper. Judge if such sins of disposition are not worse to live in, and for others to live with than sins of the body. There is really no place in Heaven for a disposition like this. A man with such a mood could only make Heaven miserable for all the people in it.

Questions :

6×5 = 30

IV. Write a precis of the following passage : 40

The interest and value of history is very much more than the key it affords to the literature, art, and monuments of the past. In itself history raises and attempts to answer two great questions : (1) What was the life of men and women in the past ages ? and (2) How did the present state of things evolve out of the past ? The reader can be interested in the past for its own sake, for the value of instruction he finds in former states of society, and former habits of thought which have passed away and left little or nothing behind. Or else the reader may be interested chiefly in the explanation which history alone can afford of the origin of the institutions, beliefs, habits, and prejudices of the various people of the world at the present day. In other words, he can be interested in the past, either for its own sake, or as the parent of the present. Similarly, he may be interested in static views of various past scenes and happenings, or he may be interested principally in the moving stream of events, the causal and evolutionary aspects of the history of mankind.

I will say a little about these two aspects of history separately. First, the value of the reader of discovering what life was in various ages and countries of old : this kind of intellectual curiosity can in our day be satisfied more fully and more correctly than in any previous age, because of the wonderful work of modern scholarship. It is a relief to escape from our own mechanical age into a world when the crafts-man was more and the machine less, when imagination was more and science was less. Nor is this mere hedonistic escapism. It enlarges the mind and imagination, otherwise imprisoned in the present. We get glimpses of other worlds, human and faulty like ours, but different from our own, and suggesting many things, some of great value, that man has thought, experienced, and forgotten. Indeed, I know of no greater triumph of the modern intellect than the truthful reconstruction of past states of society that have been long forgotten or misunderstood, recovered now by the patient work of archaeologists, antiquarians, and historians. To discover in detail what the life of man on Earth was like a hundred, a thousand, ten thousand years ago is just as great an achievement as to make ships sail under the sea or through the air. How wonderful a thing it is to look back into the past as it actually was, to get a glimpse through the curtain of old night into some brilliantly lighted scene of living men and women, not mere creatures of fiction and imagination, but warm-blooded realities even as we are. In the matter of reality, there is no difference between past and present; every moment a portion of our prosaic present drops off and is swallowed up into the poetic past.

The motive of history is at bottom poetic. The patient scholar, wearing out his life in scientific historical research, and the reader more idly turning the pages of history, are both enthralled by the mystery of time, by the mutability of all things, by the succession of the ages and generations.

Besides the contemplation and study of the Past for its own sake, there remains the second great value of History, namely, the light it throws on the present. You cannot understand your own country, still less any other, unless you know something of its history. You cannot even understand your own personal opinions, prejudices and emotional reactions unless you know what is your heritage as an Englishman, and how it has come down to you. Why does an Englishman react one way to a public or private situation, a German another way, a Frenchman in a third way ? History alone can tell you.

In this stage of the world, when many Nations are brought into close and vital contact for good and evil, it is essential, as never before, that their gross ignorance of one another should be diminished, that they should begin to understand a little of one another's historical experience and resulting mentality. It is a fault of the English to expect the people of other countries to react as they do themselves to political and international situations. Our genuine goodwill and good intentions are often brought to nothing, because we expect other people to be like ourselves. This would be corrected if we knew their history, not necessarily in detail but in broad outlines of the social and political conditions which have given to each Nation its present character.

You cannot understand the French unless you know some thing of the French Revolution, its causes and effects ; or the Germans, without knowing something of the historical relation of the German to his government, and of the German government to the Army, and of the whole Nation to military ideals, which became in Bismarck's day as potent and precious to them as Parliamentary institutions (and freedom to do what we like) have, in the long course of history, become to us English. You cannot understand the Russians, unless you have some conception of the long centuries during which they were hammered into the sense of community and of absolutism by the continual blows of Tartar and Teuton invasion sweeping over the unbroken Steppes. We are always expecting other countries to 'play the game' as we play it, to see life as we see it, but they insist on following their own harsher traditions. The present is always taking us by surprise (as it did in 1914 and in 1938-39) because we do not sufficiently know and consider the past.
